The last day started relatively early with breakfast and a generous farewell to the rest of the host family. The great hospitality of the Hungarians and their love of food was particularly noticeable in their ample supply of provisions for the train journey and the personal farewell gifts. Afterwards, the host families took us to the train station, some of us had to go on straight away, among other things to work, so we said our goodbyes right at the train station. We took a group photo with the others before we had to board the train at 9:40. This was followed by an approx. 11-hour journey home, which became longer and longer thanks to small children and Deutsche Bahn. After changing trains in Vienna and Würzburg, we finally arrived in Osterburken late in the evening and can now look back on a very enjoyable and varied time.
